

Four workflows. One weekly action view.

Separate follow-up outputs become one inspectable board - without losing where each item came from.

The question

What needs follow-up this week, which workflow produced it, and what happens when the mapping is not safe to infer?

Combine the week. Preserve the source.

Day 07 imports four standardized source types into one bounded operating view.

INVOICE

Overdue and payment follow-up

SUPPORT

Customer response work

PROJECT

Launch and delivery follow-up

SALES

Discovery and next-step follow-up

Every item carries its lineage.

The combined view does not erase the input that produced the action.

Source type

Which workflow produced it

Record ID

The original item identity

Original fields

The values received at import

Normalized fields

The deterministic working view

Mapping status

MAPPED or REVIEW

Source reference

A trace back to the input

Unresolved means REVIEW.

Missing or ambiguous fields are not silently guessed.

LEAD-322 -> REVIEW

Due date unresolved. Priority unresolved. The item stays visible, keeps its source reference, and requires human review before those fields can drive a decision.

Fail closed

A cleaner-looking board is not worth inventing data. REVIEW is an explicit product state, not an error to hide.

A board you can inspect - not an opaque score.

Mapped work is ordered for action; REVIEW items remain visible with the reason and provenance.

HIGH

Invoice follow-up - Maya - Sep 28

HIGH

Sales discovery recap - Eli - Sep 28

HIGH

Support migration reply - Maya - Sep 29

REVIEW

Sales next-step mapping - Jon - unresolved

What this proves - and what it does not.

A narrow public proof of source-preserving workflow combination.

PROVES

4 source types imported. Source identity preserved. Deterministic mapping. REVIEW for unresolved fields. Responsive weekly action view.

DOES NOT CLAIM

Live CRM or accounting integrations. Automated external actions. Production data. Business outcomes. Autonomous decision-making.
